THE LIVER AND ITS FUNCTIONS.

Thas become a well established fact that the larger portion of diseases to which the human family is subject arise in the first place from some derangement of the Liver. This organ is not only the largest, but at the same time one of the most important. The venous blood, on its reint to the heart, passes through this organ, and mits passage the impurities, as also the secretions which are necessary for digestion as well as for a cathetic to assist in the recewal of waste material & are eliminated. From this it is easily seen that the Liver is liable to get out of order to a grater or less extent, and when this occurs it is impossible for fit to properly fulfillits office of removing all objectionable matter from the blood, but allows it to pass through, carrying with it the

ON A CUBAN RAILWAY.

Presently an angular, mummified negro, who had teen frequently passing through the train and making himself generally conspicuous, "Where did you get such big deer rings a dinner-bell which he holds antiers as those?" asked a young man of a black eyed curly-banged girl in a taxidermist's store in Williams street. He referred to a pile on the walk. The girl dropped a cow blackbird which she was flaying and said:

"Those deer horns grow on elks in Montana. They are not so very large if compared with others."

The young man was directed to give the signal to leave. You might have imagined that this bell-man was connected with the station, and not a part of the apparatus of the strain; but that is an error—and at every station thereafter, when the dinner-bell rings a dinner-bell which he holds in his hand, and that is the signal to leave.
